adults alike. It is a phenomenon in towns and cities across the state. The names of top players and teams may change each year, but the tradition never does.

Iowa high schools began playing football in the late 1890s, with difficulty placing an exact starting date. With no lighted fields, games were played in the afternoon. Transportation was limited, and often the teams playing the game were located along railroads. The early fields ranged from stock yards, fairgrounds, to pastures and eventually to high school fields. The season would usually start with games in mid-September and end with games on or near Armistice Day and in a few instances Thanksgiving. The rules had little uniformity until the turn of the century, and the equipment was only minimal compared to safety standards that followed. It was not uncommon for the early teams to be a collection of high school and non-high school players.

It was a rugged game that was often brutal. In 1905 the college game reported 18 deaths and 180 serious injuries. Thus when the I.H.S.A.A. was formed in 1904, they immediately placed a ban on its members playing the game. President Theodore Roosevelt called college leaders together to try and preserve the game by making changes in the rules to make it safer. Before reinstating the sport in 1908, the membership of the IHSAA enacted age and grade eligibility rules and required a physical prior to participation. For nearly a century Iowa students have been playing the game that nearly faced extinction at the turn of the century.

The IHSAA, through its coaches and administrators, has led the nation in many rules changes regarding safety. Several were subsequently adopted and codified in the National Federation of State High School Associations' (NFHS) rule book.

In 1960 Iowa was the first state to mandate mouth pieces; in 1968 the first to eliminate spearing and prevent the use of head in tackling and blocking; and in the late 1980s and early 90s Iowa was the first to experiment with bringing coaches onto the field during time outs to check their players for heat stress and exhaustion. As early as 2003, Iowa was the only state to provide coaches with instruments and charts for measuring levels of heat and humidity, thus trying to eliminate injuries related to heat and heart stress. The IHSAA has enjoined the Iowa Football Coaches Association, which was organized in 1963, in emphasizing safety issues.

As football rules continued an emphasis in making the game safer, equipment likewise has improved. Safety and sportsmanship has always remained a primary focus of the IHSAA and Iowa has led the way in each, as kids play for the love of the game. Changes have also embraced improved playing facilities that are well-lighted with natural turf nurtured by watering systems, as well as artificial surfaces.

The 1930s and 1940s saw over 140 schools with a six or eight man team in addition to a over 270 with 11-player teams. A rebirth of 8-player started in 1998 and has grown from 6 to over 60 schools.

After several discussions with the Football Coaches Association, the IHSAA Board of Control in 1972 implemented one of the more popular innovations connected with the sport — the playoffs. Prior to 1972, teams would have an 8 or 9 game schedule and the season would end. Football was the only sport that did not have a state tournament to determine a champion and the IHSAA and the coaches felt there should be a better way to end the season. The member schools supported the idea and a new age of football was born for Iowa kids. By 1979, the number of schools offering football reached high tide with 435 teams from the 506 member high schools. Today there are 356 teams involving 377 of the 393 member schools. Until 1972, the State Champion was "mythical" — the school that finished first in the ratings poll. The playoffs in each of the five 11-player and the one 8-player class, crown champions that are made on the field. Each year, a special story about a school, a player, group of players, or a coach captures the interest of fans.

In 1993 after conferences started losing members due to school closings, consolidations and shrinking enrollments, teams had difficulty in securing complete schedules. The solution was district football and kept competition among schools with like enrollment. In 1998, an 8-player playoff format was introduced.

Iowa players have an extraordinary record of achievement beyond high school, and boast a legacy of which fans can revel. From all-time high school and University of Iowa greats, Aubrey Devine of Des Moines, Gordon Locke of Denison, one of Notre Dame's fabled Four Horsemen Elmer Layden of Davenport to modern day greats the legacy continues. The first Heisman Trophy winner was Jay Berwanger of Dubuque, and Adel's Nile Kinnick, one of the most prolific athletes the state has produced, won the Heisman in 1939. Other native Iowans who prepped on the gridirons of our state have finished high in the Heisman voting including "Sonny" Franck of Davenport, Bob O'Dell of Sioux City and Randy Duncan, Des Moines Roosevelt each finished among the top three. Numerous other Iowans have won national collegiate awards for their position play such as Chad Hennings, the first ever Outland Trophy winner, and Robert Gallery the 2003 Outland Trophy winner; Trev Alberts, the 1993 Butkus Award winner, and Nate Kaeding, the 2002 Groza Award winner. Several Iowans have gone on to star in the NFL and other professional leagues. Near the top of the list is former two-time Super Bowl MVP, Kurt Warner from Cedar Rapids Regis. Former Iowa preps have finished high or won individual honors at other NCAA Divisions like Chris Hegg of Hudson at Truman State 1985 and Adam Timmerman of Cherokee, D-II offensive lineman of the year, in 1994 when he played for South Dakota State. In Division III, Marion's Carey Bender, while playing for Coe, won the Gagliardi Trophy, that division's equivalent of the Heisman.

A total of 136 former players have been inducted in the players' Hall of Fame prior to 2010; 21 Iowa players have gone earned First Team Consensus All-American recognition at the NCAA Division I schools and 78 have become first team All-Americans in Divisions I-AA, II and III, with several others winning NAIA honors. Twenty-nine Iowa high school graduates ended the 2009 season on the roster of National Football League teams.

But, the huge base of hometown heroes, forever nameless to many, continues to be your typical high school youngster — the heart and soul of high school football. Also, key to the success are the coaches and administrators who have endeavored to deliver a great educational experience to their student-athletes. Since 1969, the football coaches' association has inducted over 206 coaching greats. Seven coaches, including five who are active, now have 300 or more victories, 37 others have 200 or more career wins while another 65 have 150 or more career triumphs.

While the individual player and coach achievements are many and signify a strong measure of school and community support, the underpinning is a large core of players who participate in the sport and dedicate themselves to representing their school to the best of their abilities. That makes "Football Friday" a true community celebration. It is an experience that attracts nearly one out of every four high school boys in the state and reminds those who have gone before of the thrills and values they enjoyed. The mere act of an athlete playing football for their local school is a bond with the three-quarters of a million who have preceded them.
